Welcome to this inside look at Housing Washington 2021!

Together with the Washington Low Income Housing Alliance and the Washington State Department of Commerce, we are your hosts for this annual conference focused on affordable housing all across the state of Washington.

We're glad you're here, because we need you. Now, more than ever, we need to come together.

Last year when we made the decision that the conference would be both virtual and free of charge, we thought it would be only for 2020 and then we'd get back to "normal." Well, here we are, at the tail end of 2021, and we're far from our old "normal" Housing Washington conference. But we've found one major positive to that: Hundreds more people can join us online than could ever have come to the conference when it was in person. This has been a valuable lesson in inclusion.

Because housing touches everyone. Everyone has a part to play in solving housing challenges—and we still have a lot of them, from unaffordability to homelessness to evictions to foreclosures to the pandemic. All these challenges fall the hardest on Black, indigenous and people of color. We know we can't solve them without tackling systemic racism across the housing industry.

We have a lot of work ahead of us. But we also have a lot going for us:

We have a legislature that is willing to make big investments and big policy shifts to move us forward.

We have an incredibly effective army of advocates. We have an experienced industry of housing developers, both nonprofit and for-profit.

We have lenders and real-estate professionals who have realigned their priorities to closing racial gaps in homeownership. And we have our state's residents and communities who are vital to solving the problems that affect them.

And we have you, I hope. If you care about housing, we need you at Housing Washington. Wherever you come from and whatever your field, you bring your own ideas, experiences, and solutions to share.

And you'll find inspiration, tools, resources, solidarity, and new connections. Take a look at this guide and our website for a preview of the speakers and sessions.

See you online at the conference—and hopefully throughout the year!

We want to acknowledge that we are all, wherever we are today, on the unceded ancestral land of the coast Salish peoples, the traditional home of all tribes and bands within the Duwamish, Suquamish, Tulalip, and Muckleshoot nations.

A Call to Address Racial Inequity in Affordable Housing

The nation is in a stage of reckoning, and 2020 has exposed affordable housing issues these leaders say must be faced now.

(Originally posted on Affordable Housing Finance)

Where you live matters. Because of systemic racism and historic discriminatory housing policies, there hasn't been equal access to stable, affordable housing or quality health care, education, and family-sustaining jobs. The pandemic has exposed how Black and Indigenous people and other communities of color bear the brunt of inequity at many levels—housing inequity is the most glaring.

The need has never been greater for a comprehensive, equitable affordable housing framework that is people-centered to protect tenants; preserve communities; create healthy, thriving neighborhoods; and produce supportive housing more effectively.

That's one of several messages Cecile Chalifour, head of community development real estate in the West region for JPMorgan Chase, and Jacqueline Waggoner, vice president and Southern California market leader for Enterprise Community Partners, shared in a recent conversation on achieving racial equity, especially in housing.

For decades, we haven't been building housing that people can afford at the rate needed. We're half a million units short in Los Angeles County alone.

The Challenge

Waggoner: COVID-19 has heightened the systemic inequalities that have persisted for years. For example, before the pandemic, one in three families in Los Angeles County was spending more than 50% of their income on a place to live, while 66,000 men, women, and children experience homelessness. Before the pandemic, we were already experiencing an uptick in homelessness—it increased by 12.7% from 2019 to 2020.

The homelessness crisis has been a long time in the making. For decades, we haven't been building housing that people can afford at the rate needed. We're half a million units short in Los Angeles County alone.

This has created a persistent disparity in access to stable housing, especially for people of color. In Los Angeles County, Black people make up 8% of the overall population but 34% of the population experiencing homelessness. If you don't understand the needs of the population being served, then you'll never solve the problem. It's time we acknowledge race-neutral housing strategies have fallen short.

Chalifour: JPMorgan Chase is continuing to make major investments in affordable housing—we invest in communities and people, not just real estate. People of color face different hardships, and existing tools for affordable housing come short of addressing those differences. To deliver more opportunities and prevent racial inequities from being perpetuated, we have to acknowledge this. The pandemic has only made it more urgent that we ask ourselves how the major public and private investments made in affordable housing could be tailored to address the needs of people of color.

Those questions expand outside of affordable housing, so the firm has executed a training on redlining for all its commercial real estate staff. To prevent racial inequities, it always comes back to yourself, and it starts with knowing history, understanding how we got where we are and why what we do matters. In particular within real estate and finance.

The Way Forward

Waggoner: Enterprise recently hosted a national tour of an interactive exhibit called Undesign the Redline that has helped jump-start the conversation around the legacy of housing discrimination. It's been a game-changing tool for level-setting the issues and sharing how historical and sustained racist policies and practices have gotten us to where we are now.

We need to acknowledge history to create a strategy that moves us forward together. And, moving forward toward racial equity involves bold changes in capital, systems, and policy so that we can fix the imbalance and inequity in our communities.

Chalifour: We have many diversity and inclusion initiatives at the firm, including Advancing Black Pathways. Some of it is supporting organizations like Enterprise, or the Non-Profit Housing Association of Northern California's training to open the field to diverse, emerging developers. I encourage people to reach out to others in the field with ideas and experiences. There are many initiatives emerging that are moving us all in the right direction!

A Word from Heritage Bank

No one could have imagined the change and upheaval we would experience over the last year—and we're still not sure what the future holds. What we do know is that we're doing everything we can to ensure our customers, employees and neighbors are cared for.

At the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic, we took swift action to protect the health and safety of our customers and employees. We transitioned nearly half of our employees to work remotely and limited in-person branch visits to appointment only. Our drive-ups became instrumental and essential in continuing to be able to serve our customers.

When the Coronavirus Aid, Relief and Economic Security (CARES) Act was passed on March 27, 2020, which included the Paycheck Protection Program (PPP), our bankers immediately stepped up to help their clients. At the conclusion of PPP on August 8, 2020, we had funded 4,642 PPP loans totaling $897.4 million. Our ability to get funds approved helped businesses retain their workers or rehire those who had been laid off.

Though, 2020 wasn't just about a global health crisis. Social movements like Black Lives Matter brought renewed attention to equality issues. We recognized the importance of coming together as one to support the changes needed to improve our social structure. In this spirit, we accelerated the development of our Diversity, Equity and Inclusion plan because we are committed to a culture of respect. By celebrating and embracing our differences, we become stronger as an organization. We are then better able to support and represent the communities we serve.

But while those are important words, more important are the actions we take as an organization to create real change. That's why we will continue to support our communities, focus on environmental and social sustainability, remain dedicated to affordable housing—and all of the other work we put in each day to help fuel economic prosperity and improve the lives of those around us for years to come.

Review the full schedule and select your do-not-miss speakers. Add the most important sessions to your calendar and set an alarm.

03 Note taking

Go old school and use a pen and paper to jot down notes as you learn from the speakers. This will keep your computer free for viewing.

Tips for Attending a Virtual Conference

04 Give yourself a break

Work from home means that most of us are never truly alone. We are all much more patient and accepting of interruptions from our children and pets.

05 Get up and move

At in-person events, there are plenty of chances to stand up, stretch, and take a quick break. With virtual events it's easy to feel confined to your desk and chair. Build in breaks in between sessions to take a short walk or stand and stretch.

Remember, to have snacks and beverages available during down times.

06 Participate and follow up

Don't be shy. It might seem impossible to network when you're attending an event from your living room or office but it's possible. There will be opportunities to interact with speakers, sponsors, and fellow attendees.

Keep the conversations going! Plan your own virtual meetups with people after the conference.
